1. Harbor facilities in Macao are practically non-existent. Large ocean-going vessels must anchor about twenty miles outside the harbor, and their cargo must be brought ashore by coolies as there are no cranes on the docks. Many ships of the Companhia Nacional de Navagacao do not call at Macao, but load and unload cargo at Hongkong for trans-shipment to Macao. Portuguese warships have to go into Hongkong to drydock. The fairway channels are covered with sand to such an extent that even the small boats plying between Hongkong and Macao cannot pass during low tide.
2. Regular passenger and freight services exist between Macao and the following ports: Hongkong, Canton, Kong Moon (Chiangmen, 113-06, 22-34), Chungshan (113-23, 22-31), Shihing (Kacyao, 112-28, 23-03) and San Fao (San-chou, 112-51, 22-52). There are two British ships on the Hongkong-Macao run and twenty-six Chinese ships sailing to Hongkong and the other ports. Irregular service exists to Haiphong, Kuangchowwan, and other China coastal ports.
3. The following is a tabulation of incoming and outgoing passengers during March, April, and May of 1946:
